Key-person and buy/sell planning with a high-cash-value policy

Many business owners need life insurance to formally fund their key-person and buy/sell strategies, and if you structure things appropriately, one policy may cover both needs at the same time. For businesses that have to maintain large amounts of liquid assets, consider using a high-cash-value universal life policy to help you fulfill these needs, and more.

Let's look at a sample case

A commercial construction company had a large term policy on its owner and founder. It covered two important needs — key-person protection and buy/sell funding. The death benefit would help compensate the company for the loss of the owner in the event of his untimely death, and it would also help the company buy back his stock according to the buy/sell agreement.

- The term policy had a $10 million death benefit
- The annual premium on the term policy was $30,375
- The premium is a net expense to the company

There may be a more efficient way to achieve these objectives

Because large commercial construction businesses have substantial bonding requirements, the company had to keep a lot of liquid assets on its balance sheet. By replacing the term policy with a $10 million Nationwide® Future Executive UL policy, the company would be able to reposition those liquid assets into it and implement a solution that could provide all of this:

- Key-person protection to help compensate for the loss of the owner
- Buy/sell agreement funding to help buy back the company stock at the owner's death
- An improved financial position; the company may book the cash surrender value of the new policy as an asset (i.e., other assets — cash surrender value life insurance), which results in a net gain
- A better rate of return; instead of the .25% to .50% it had been earning on the liquid assets where they were, the company could now earn a 1.86% rate of return on the cash surrender value in the life insurance policy, net of all fees in Year 1

Take a closer look at the numbers

After weighing its options, the company moved forward and funded its key-person and buy/sell arrangements with the Nationwide Future Executive UL policy. It paid a $650,000 annual premium for seven years, repositioning a total of $4,550,000 and earning a higher rate of return. And it still maintained the required liquid assets for bonding, since it had access to the cash surrender value in the policy.
